Check it Out

The church library will be ready for business on Sunday, Sept. 5th after the morning worship service. Karen Eades has been doing hours of work to get the room and books ready for use. She also had a special crew to help her get ready. Make sure to tell Elizabeth Osborn thank you for decorating and Janice May and Carol Fox for helping label and attach pockets to the books. Lastly, we'd like to thank Dudley Lord and David Page for working on the lights in the room and Matthew Eades for moving the shelves.

We've had several people inquire if they can make book donations to the library. The short answer is yes, but there are some things to remember when considering if a certain book would be good for the library. First, we are looking to make this a quality library, so quality books are encouraged. What is the condition of the book you are wanting to donate? If the pages are torn, stained, or marked on they would probably not be good for the library. Also, while there are plenty of classics out there, some books are just old. Consider when the book was written and if it would still be relevant to today's reader. Finally, and most importantly, the book needs to have a Christian message. Stephen King is a great writer, but his books would not be good for a church library. This library is to be a resource to help you grow in your relationship with Jesus. For ideas on what type of book we are looking for, you can check out the "Future Shelf of:" books on the clipboards in the library.

The "Future Shelf of:" books are ones that are known to shaping Christianity right now. They are written by
